Summary

The main purpose of the article is to expose that truth and fact are under assault in recent years, presenting the case of a lawsuit between Deborah Lipstadt and David Irving for a concept called Holocaust denial (holocaust didn't happen and it's a conspiracy behind it). The cause of the lawsuit was a research made by Mrs. Lipstadt, that showed two principal facts: the former, deniers are wolves in sheep's clothing, neo-Nazis parading as respectable academics; and the latter, deniers want to take lies, their lies, and dress them up as opinions, trying to make them truth in some time in the future. The British laws put the onus in Mrs. Lipstadt to show that the version of Mr. Irving wasn't truth. Mrs. Lipstadt won the trial, and showed Mr. Irving as a liar, a racist, and an anti-Semite. Finally, Mrs. Lipstadt gives a message: Social media, for all the gifts it has given us, has also allowed the difference between facts, and lies to be flattened, and we cannot be beguiled by rational appearances. In my opinion, there are many social groups that are trying to confuse the people in order to gain some advantage against their contenders, even if they have to twist the truth or even telling lies, and they use the social media as a perfect way to give to their messages the power to make the people think that it's truth.
