“When we have learned to listen to trees... that is home. That is happiness.” This is a quote with which philosopher Herman Hesse, who was a German poet, describes trees as sanctuaries in his book Trees: Reflections and Poems. Hesse is just one of many authors, poets, artists and philosophers who, over the centuries, have been inspired by trees and woodland, and that is the point when a tree can connect many people from the past with present, and let us feel the future according to Fiona Stafford. Besides,
